Dear Donor:

Life lessons emphasize that triumphing over struggles is a testament to strength, courage, and character. If society is to evolve, some of us, with the knowledge and resources, must step up as beacons of hope and inspire, motivate and help those who will lead us into the future. This revelation has inspired me to return to higher learning as an educator to support traditional and non-traditional college students. It is also the driving force behind my decision to provide free business consultation services to local and international small businesses for the past fifteen years.

On occasion, I ponder about the allocation of resources within our communities. Research suggests that approximately 16% - 19% of college students face technology barriers. After witnessing students being placed on a waitlist of six to eight weeks to borrow a laptop computer to help with coursework and hearing testimonials from some students who are uncertain about obtaining financial assistance to aid educational goals or those who do not yet possess skills to obtain part-time positions to cover psychological needs, I am more perplexed. I want to be a symbol of hope, helping change the mindset of students who have found themselves without a champion in life. You can also help our cause by being an example for many who feel that time and circumstance are not deterrents for accomplishing essential things like a post-secondary education. As a donor, your donation will help fund resources like school supplies and scholarship grants.

The diverse groups of people I have met throughout my career have broadened my perspective and appreciation for the genetic makeup of our country, its' cultural differences, and the pool of resources available for anyone who wishes to follow their dreams. The pinnacle of success for me is the acknowledgment and admiration you receive from those you can help transition from stages in both their personal and professional lives. Success creates the desire to share your experiences to help influence and motivate others who may or may not have the desire or means to pursue their dreams because they are disillusioned or rendered handicapped by circumstances, they feel are insurmountable. I want you to be part of this mission. Please help make this organization a reality by making a tax-deductible donation today.

Sincerely,
Clarence Dias Edmeade
